

BISECT AUSTRALIA MAKES GREEN SPLASH!

Bisect Australia sells a range of revolutionary two piece surf boards in Australia, NZ and Japan.

Bisect Australia may be a small business in the huge global surf industry but there is nothing small about its commitment to the environment. In fact, BA is putting many of the surf giants to shame!

Company director's have taken on a revegetation programme on Tasmania's east coast that has already seen a massive 12,000 native trees planted. The project area centres on the Templestowe Lagoon and wetlands that back one of the most breathtakingly beautiful beaches in Australia.

"There are loads of not for profit organisations around that make carbon off-setting and going green in general easy, but that was not enough for us", says David Quon from BA. "We wanted to do something in our own backyard that would have local and global implications".

In addition to absorbing enough CO2 to cancel out business related emissions, this native tree planting project benefits the local community and boosts wildlife diversity across the whole Long Point area.
